DIPHTHERIA TO BE WATCHED BY HEALTH BOARD

To check the spread of the diphtheria contagion, which already has claimed several victims in Honolulu since the beginning of the school year the board of health has determined upon a rigid enforcement of the regulation governing the treatment and eventual discharge of diphtheria patients.

As stated by Dr. A. N. Sinclair in the Star-Bulletin a week ago the danger of infection is greatest from patients not entirely free from the diphtheria bacilli who are discharged as cured. He said then, that release from quarantine should come only after at least two tests of the patient's throat secretions have shown negative developments. He cited a recent instance of a death and two other cases in one neighborhood which unquestionably were contracted from a child supposed to have been cured, but who still had a "severe cold."

Dr. Pratt, at the meeting of the board of health yesterday, called attention to the case of a child released from the Children's Hospital, who returned home and carried the contagion to another youngster of the family.

The regulations governing government physicians are to be revised and copies sent to all territorial physicians.

On the recommendation of President Pratt the health board authorized the appointment of Dr. Downing, an experienced bacteriologist of San Francisco, to relieve Chief Sanitary Inspector D. S. Bowman of this work in Hawaii, enabling the inspector to devote more time to his other duties. Bowman has been in urgent need of assistance for some time, and the new man is added to the force at his request.

Dr. Pratt stated today that no blame attaches to the medical staff of the Children's Hospital for the one case recently released from that institution before absolute cure was effected.

"The case was in the charge of an independent practitioner and the patient was discharged at his order, none of the hospital's medical corps having any connection with the affair," said Dr. Pratt.

"Tides" was the subject of the lecture by Professor John S. Donaghoe, of the department of mathematics at the College of Hawaii, in Cooke Hall, Y. M. C. A. building, last night. With the use of charts and lantern slides the speaker explained the causes and variations of tides and the mathematical means of computing their height and time of occurrence. Professor Donaghoe has made some interesting measurements of tidal conditions at Honolulu.

"Health is wealth," quoted the sage, "Oh, no, it isn't," replied the stranger. "I'm a doctor."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Three Weeks" in dramatic form is a very tame and very tiresome version of Ellner Glyn's sensational novel. Advertised by the management as "full of thrills and given with every thrill that goes with the play," the opening of the production at the Opera house last night failed to furnish a single thrill except once when Mr. James Dillon climbed a shaky ladder into a shaky balcony and there was a chance that he might get a fall to the stage.

Of abnormal "sex-interest," the dramatized version of the Glyn novel is devoid. Of unhealthy suggestiveness it is also devoid. It lacks attractive wickedness, lacks clever situation, or dramatic dialogue.

Lacking the attributes of alluring sex-evil and of dramatic cleverness, "Three Weeks" in play form is a dreary succession of scenes full of mawkish and improbable love between a Russian princess traveling incognito and an English youth whose ability to recognize a great passion is akin to that of a Jersey calf. It is an island of impossible sentimentality, entirely surrounded by seas of verbal floundering.

Whatever thrills there were in the book have been successfully amputated as the story was being worked up for the stage. Even the famous tiger-skin scene, in which the audience is supposed to hold its breath while Paul Verdayne and his beautiful Slav princess recline on the spotted, fur and utter noble sentiments, turns out to be all very proper as well as bordering on the ludicrous, for Paul, after being given a sleeping potion so that his princess may steal away from him forever—well, Paul falls asleep on the tiger skin with his mouth wide open and with the general effect of the hired man resting after a hard day with the plough. The result is not particularly conducive to high-flown romance.

Through four acts and a tableau of sonorous soul-washing sentences, the Brissac company struggles, and in spite of the handicaps of the play, the company gives a fairly interesting interpretation. Miss Brissac at times almost redeems the part of the noble Russian with the strange eyes from its deadly level of near-sapnism. James Dillon, who has the part of the remarkably stupid English youth, does as much with it as can be expected. The rest of the cast is submerged, as it were, in the heavy seas of sentimentality that these two principals stir up. One of the welcome diversions was the appearance of a native runner or something from Russia, wearing a queer costume and gasping out the news that someone was on Paul's trail and unless Paul took the next train for dear old London there was likely to be an international fracas at the peaceful Switzerland summer resort where the two lovers first met. This Russian runner seemed for a moment as if he intended to start something, but the expectancy was short-lived, and the utterance of grandiose sentimentalities went on.

The staging is well done and the company's work is always sincere and earnest. The trouble with "Three Weeks" is that it is a play built simply to make money out of the unenviable reputation of an unhealthy book. In the building of the play, all originality has been lost and all unconventional wickedness as well. About the most that "Three Weeks" deserves is 30 days.

The opening last night was witnessed by a small audience of a meek disposition. Most of them remained until the end, waiting for a thrill.

CONSTITUTION ADOPTED TO GOVERN THE OAHUAN

At a meeting of the Punahoa student body yesterday, a constitution was adopted for the Oahuan, a monthly paper published by the students of Oahu College. For many years the necessity of a good constitution has been realized, and so several of the faculty drew up a constitution which has been adopted. Formerly, the heads of this paper spent as much money as they pleased on different numbers, and the result was that it went into debt. From now on the financial end of the publication will be controlled by this constitution. Every month the manager will have to make out a budget which will be approved by the staff, among the members of which is a member of the faculty, and only so much will be allowed for every number of the paper published.

The change which effects the students more than any other is that section which says that "only subscribers will be allowed to vote when the officers of the staff are elected each year." Previously, everybody voted; but this change was made so that only those interested in the paper enough to do something for it could vote.

The laws also say that only those who have contributed to the paper shall be eligible for the editorial offices. This does not pertain to the office of manager, which may be held by any competent student. This new constitution goes into effect at once. It will be tried for a year, and if the changes do not work out all right, the laws may be changed again.

BOLD BURGLARS TRY IN VAIN TO PICK LOCK

Unusual Sight in Heart of City Proves Efficacy of Right Mechanism

The unusual sight of two men, evidently professional burglars, trying to pick a lock and enter the front door of a house on King street, a few steps from Fort, right in the heart of the business section, drew so large a crowd yesterday afternoon that the big policeman who is always on hand to transfer his attentions from his usual job to that of making the crowd "move on."

Strange to say he did not seem to care a rap whether the house-breakers got in or not, but this does not indicate that he was "doing politics" or that he was lax because McDuffie is away.

He had simply looked through a window and had seen the householders laughing on the other side of the door to think that anyone would try to open his door after he had put on the best burglar proof lock made. The would-be house-breakers rested up from their vain efforts to pick the

MISS VON LINDEN IS LAID TO REST

Miss Fannie Ann von Linden, who passed away at Queen's hospital October 15, was laid to rest this afternoon at 2 o'clock from the undertaking parlors of H. W. Williams, interment being in Nuuanu cemetery.

Miss von Linden was born in Bavaria about eighty years ago. Nothing is known of her early life, as she was extremely reticent concerning it. But she had been in India as a teacher of languages in an English family. She had also been associated with several physicians in the states as a masseuse. She was residing in San Francisco at the time of the fire and having been rendered homeless and almost destitute, she never entirely recovered from the shock. She arrived in Honolulu on the steamer Mongolia on Aug. 26, 1912. Having no friends in this city, she was taken to the King's Daughter's Home soon after her arrival, where she remained for 19 months. On the 19th of September she was taken to the Queen's hospital suffering from an injured hip, but owing to her weak condition it was found inadvisable to operate.

PHOTOGRAPHER PERKINS DESIGNS NEW METHODS

Successfully Handles Portrait by Means of 'Colonial Etching'

Decidedly unique, artistic and pleasing is the new way of treating photographs—a method designed and put into practice by R. W. Perkins, one of Honolulu's most successful portrait photographers. Mr. Perkins calls the new arrangement a "Colonial etching"—and truly the effect is of an especially well-done etching.

After the print is developed and toned, enough of the unimportant details are eliminated to focus one's attention on the important details of features, expression, etc. Then a soft, hand-tinted background is added, together with a few pencil strokes to define a shape consistent with the pose—and, presto! One has an effect that much enhances the value of the photograph itself and that induces a "charm" not felt on looking at a mere print that has not been so treated.

Words are hardly suitable for a clear description of this "Colonial etching," as its appeal is of course made to the eyes rather than to the vocabulary. The Perkins studio has been entirely renovated and presents a most attractive appearance.

lock at about 5 p. m., and the night policeman reports that they made no further effort during the night, but soon after seven this morning they again appeared on the job, and have been hard at work all day. They seem obvious of the crowds that are still watching them, and the householder is still on the other side of the door laughing and saying to himself, "It is to laugh—I should worry after putting that new pick-proof lock on," etc.

The burglars give indications of staying on the job several days if they can not get in sooner, and the householder says he is interested enough to stay on the inside and laugh at their vain efforts till they give it up. When one goes by the corner of Fort and Kings streets it will interest him to step over to the crowd and watch proceedings.

COL. LAUKEA SHOCKED AT GROSS NEGLECT

Finds Valuable Historic Paintings To Be in Very Poor Condition

Colonel Curtis P. Laukea visited the capitol building this morning with a view to helping the Promotion Committee in its plans for labelling the paintings hanging in the throne room and on the walls of the various offices. In order that the building may be made more of an attraction for tourists, he came away declaring himself shocked at the evidences of neglect of these valuable oil paintings.

"It seems to me that these paintings have been outrageously neglected. In some of them even the canvas is cracking," he said. "Many of these paintings are of historic and artistic value, continued the colonel, and many are the work of famous artists. They are not mere photographs, but they are paintings, and a number of them were presented by monarchs of Europe, during the last century, to the Hawaiian kingdom. There is an interesting historical incident connected with almost every painting. The circumstances under which some of them were presented by monarchs of Europe, during the last century, to the Hawaiian kingdom. There is an interesting historical incident connected with almost every painting. The circumstances under which some of them were presented by the reigning kings and queens of Europe to the monarchs of Hawaii, make very interesting stories.

"The frames of many of the pictures are worm-eaten, and likely to crumble at any time. Many thousands of dollars in fees were spent to first class artists to paint these pictures, and more thousands were spent on the frames. Now the frames are faded and clogged with dust, and the fine canvases are spoiling for lack of attention. I am glad that the Promotion Committee has decided to label all the paintings. Properly labeled, they will interest the tourists as much as anything we have here. The same is true of the treaties and other documents of picturesque interest in the archives. They are of no use to anybody while they are kept in the bottom of trunks. Properly displayed, they would make an exhibit that could not be matched anywhere, for I suppose it is only the treaties of a defunct nation that could be so displayed. There is no reason, then, why these treaties, with their enormous seals and the autographs of some of the most noted European and Asiatic monarchs of the 19th century should not be shown.

There are 30 paintings in the capitol and less than half of them bear any label. Colonel Laukea was chairman to King Kalakaua and is now the confidential and business agent of Queen Liliuokalani, and is about as familiar as anyone with Hawaiian history. Yet on his visit to the capitol he confessed to uncertainty regarding the names of two of the subjects of oil paintings hanging on the walls. "I don't care how strongly you quote me in criticism of the neglect of these works of art and historic interest," he said after his investigation.

DR. DEAS DISMISSED BY BOARD OF HEALTH

On the charge of leaving his post without permission and appearing in public in an uncreditable physical condition, Dr. W. B. Deas, government physician at Hana, Maui, was summarily dismissed by the territorial board of health yesterday afternoon, on the report of Attorney General 'Nayer, whom Dr. Deas accompanied over to Honolulu yesterday morning from Waikuku.

Dr. Deas had been summoned to Waikuku to appear in a land court case, and instead of returning to his post, joined the Honolulu party coming back to the capital city. The vote for his dismissal was unanimous. It was said this is the second time he has been dismissed from the service.
